

Copying a picture from a web page

There may be occasions when you would like to download a picture from the web for a variety of reasons. This is how to do it.

Simply as an exercise, let us say that you want to copy a picture of Venice to attach to an email or insert in your 'blog'. (A blog is simply a Web diary.)

1. Go to the Google site www.google.com and search for Venice. You will immediately be presented with a load of web pages referring to the Italian city but this is not what we want – we want a picture.

A screenshot of a Google search page for the word 'venice'. The search bar contains 'venice' and the search button is visible. Below the search bar, the 'Web' tab is selected, showing a list of search results. An arrow points from the 'Images' tab to the 'Web' tab. The search results include:

- Venice - Click on Images
- www.lastminute.com Fabulous city breaks to Venice 5* deals at 3* prices - book n
- Hilton Venice Hotel Breathtaking Views Over Venice. Easily Accessible from
- A map of Venice, Italy, showing the city and surrounding areas.
- Venice VE Italy - maps.google.co.uk
- Venice - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia
- Venice Travel Guide and Travel Information - Lonely Planet
- VeNETia - The Web Site of Venice Italy Guide - Venise - Venedig

2. So click on Images instead of Web and a vast array of potential image thumbnails will appear.

3. It is probably a good idea to select Large Pictures from the dropdown menu at this point.
4. Navigate your way to a suitable picture and double click on the thumbnail. This will open the small image in a new page.
